

Editorial

Pieter J. Lalleman

After our two thematic issues on ethics and on spirituality, the present issue is a mixed one. There are two biblical articles, two on missions and two which interact with giants of the past whom we as Evangelicals cannot ignore. However, one of them is commended and one is not.

After a short stint as review editor, Dr Pekka Pitkanen has moved on. In his place we welcome James Eglinton who is by no means the first Scot to be attached to this journal. He is hoping to complete his doctorate at the University of Edinburgh this summer. From this autumn he will be working and living in Kampen, Netherlands, for a year. His email address is jpeglinton@gmail.com; as postal address, please use:

The present issue is the last for which Dr Jochen Eber has edited the book reviews in German. Jochen is handing over to Dr Berthold Schwarz in Giessen, whose email address is schwarz@fthgiessen.de. We are very grateful to Jochen for many years of service to our journal.

Our readers will have noticed that we have survived the demise of our publisher Paternoster (STL UK). As can be seen on the opposite page, all business of the journal is now handled by Alpha Graphics of Nottingham. The company tells me that it would be good to have more subscribers to our journal and we would be glad if current readers could help us towards this goal.

Good articles on any area of theology, written by evangelical theologians, are also welcome. We have a preference for European authors working in Europe and we particularly encourage scholars in the north, east and south of Europe to share their work with us.
